A Pressing Matter

You've spent all year growing fruit trees, now what to do with the harvest arriving all at once?

The fruit cage purchased at the beginning of the growing season has worked a treat keeping pests and birds away from the harvest on your trees. With autumn crisp in the air, now is the time to pick the bountiful harvest. However, the annual fruit grower's problem of wind fall and surplus fruit still remains a mystery to solve.

Stephanie Harrod, Director of Harrod Horticultural, believes she has solved the perennial problem with a time honoured solution.

“Our fantastic new range of oak fruit crushers and presses will solve the problem every fruit tree grower has - what to do with the glut of fruit produced every year. We offer a full range of fruit pressing products, turning wind fall fruit from a nuisance to a juice that can be enjoyed for months to come. The juice can even be frozen and is far healthier than most mass-produced, commercial juices as it has no additives”.

The traditional oak fruit presses are sold in a range of sizes (12, 20 and 36 litres) to suit fruit growers and owners of Harrod Horticultural fruit cages of all sizes, with prices from £224.95. Fruit pickers, apple racks and harvest collection bags also compliment the range of accessories on offer.

“Our range of fruit presses were displayed at Chelsea and they attracted a very positive response, with many orders taken at the show. We offer every step that a fruit presser would need, from the beginning to the end of the process,” says Stephanie.
